Yes No Game

Yes or no questions are a great activity to get to know your students, starting classroom conversations, or as a Question of the Day. They also make great journal prompts for kids who need to build their written expression skills.

The next time your kids walk into the room, ask them a question. For more engagement, use these questions cards as conversation starter. You'll find some of these questions are funny, some are factual, and some are thought provoking as you engage with your students in a "get-to-know-you" time.

This Yes No Game is designed to be used during your morning meetings, signing time, circle time, etc. Pick one question a day for students to answer as to allow more time for group discussion of students' answers/preferences.

Preparing the Questions for the Yes No Game:

1. Print and laminate YES/NO question cards.
2. Cut out individual YES/NO Squares and store by grade levels.
3. Glue YES/NO Signs onto large popsicle stick for students to show their answer.

Directions for the Yes No Game:

1. Pick a question of the day, hand out YES/NO sticks to each student.
2. Ask students the question of the day. Have them hold up sign Yes or No depending on their personal view.
3. Give each student the opportunity to answer question, allow time for discussion.
4. Have Fun getting to know each other better!

BONUS Tip

We created the visual cards to correspond to sign vocabulary used in our 20-book ASL Lesson Plan Series here. In this teacher key, we have added the books you can find additional ideas to use. Use our online ASL dictionary here to support your activity.

We suggest using the sign language for the key words on each question card when asking these questions. For example, for the question “Do you help your friends?”, use the sign for FRIEND. Continue with all the question cards in this manner to build sign vocabulary.
